THE CAVSES, WHICH MO. 390 ued the chiefe Commaunders of the Nauie of her most excellent Maiestie the Queene of England, in their voyage and expedition for Portingall, to take and arrest in the mouth of the river of Lisbone, certaine shippes of Corne, and other provisions of warre bounde for the said Citie, prepared for the services of the King of Spaine, in the ports and Provinces within and about the Sownde, the 30. day of Iune, in the yeere of our Lord 1589, and of her Maiesties raigne the 31.

Hereas it is a thing out of cotrouersie, that certaine Marchaunts resiant and inhabiting within and neere vato the Sounde in the kingdome of Denmarke, comonly called the Marchants of the Hanse townes, wil grieuously exclaime among forreine Nations, against the chiefe Commanders of the Fleete of the most excellent Queene of England, as infringers of the law of Nations, and of the ancient contracts made betwixt the Kings of England, and the Hanse marchants, and as contemners of the Newtralitie which the said Hanse marchants doe chalenge to themselues, whereby they thinke and hold it lawfull for them to exercise the trassque of all marchandises whatsoeuer, with all people whosoeuer, euen in the times of greatest hostilitie verweinte windludellerkings aftair findes, of realon of the intercepting & arresting of certaine of their ships, passing to the ayde and furnishing of the king of Spaine with corne, and prouisions of warre: it seemed good vnto her foresaid excellent Maiestie, in respect of her good will, together with singular affection and loue to the sacred Empire, the Emperours Maiestie himselfe, the noble Princes of Germanie, and to all & singular the Estates of the Empire, in this publike fort to make it manifest for what causes the aforesaid Hanse ships were stayed by the officers of her Fleete, and as lawfull prises ta-ken and confiscated. Which is done to no other end or purpose, but to make it euident that the same action doth stand & agree with equitie and instice, and to be a thing most probable, that other Princes whosoeuer, their seruants and Officers in the like case, and vpon the like occasion, woulde not have failed to take the like course.

For it is a thing notorious & sufficiently knowen, not onely to the sewe Hanse townes, but also to all Christendome, that the king of Spaine is transported with a mortall hatred against the Queenes Maiestie of England: a witnes whereof is the intended but not performed inuasion of the kingdome, and Dominions of England by the saide king the yeere last past, surthered by him with all his force, but by the mercie of God vtterly disappointed.

Which exulcerate malice of the Kings minde, not lately sprong vp, but of long time lurking in the closet of his heart, yet foreseene and still preuented by the Queenes Maiestie, she often by her messengers sent to him for that purpose, as with most gentile medicines inticuotife a to anwage, to actue him to a newe minde meeter for a Prince, and so great a king as himselfe: to the ende that remouing out of both their mindes not onely the staine, but also the suspition of the staine of discontentments, they might dispose themselves to enter and conclude a firme peace and durable friendship, according to the ancient leagues betweene their progenitours and fathers, and their kingdomes, for the space of many yeeres happily continued.

Theking as a man bewitched by the bishop of Rome, the very firebrand and bellowes of all the ciuill warres in Christendome, neglecteth the remedies and conditions of peace that have bene offred, and perseuereth according to his beginning, in his hostile intédement against her Maiestie, not otherwise contentable or satisfiable then with her destruction, the slaughter and bloodshed of her people most obedient vnto her, and to bee short, with the conquest of the whole kingdome.

And for the better effecting hereof, hee hath oftentimes sent his messengers (you woulde rather say his fireflingers) into England, & of latest yeeres two speciall persons, of all the rest most eger and furious, Gyrald Despes, and Bernardine Mendoza, who ceased not to sound and perswade the mindes of all those whome they coulde growe in acquaintance with, and were men giuen ouer to al mischieses and diabolical practifes: promising them, and bestowing vpon them extraordinarie rewards, of purpose to stirre them vp to moue domestical conspiracies against her Maiestie.

And how much they prevailed in their attempts, cusse, for so this worke woulde growe large. The 3. principall conspiracies, the one of the Earles of Northumberland and Westmerland, and of their partizans, the second of the Duke of Norfolke, the third of the two Pagets brethren, as also of the two Throckmortons and of their consederats, whereof some were condemned and executed, for their intended ouerthrow of the Queenes Maiestie, and of the state of the Common wealth, and the rest that are sted, and wander up and downe in uncertaine places, and are to this day mainteined at the charge and by the purse of the Spanish King, are in this matter very sufficient witnesses.

But the Patrons and complotters of these rebellious, being subtile and cautelous in their actions, howsoever apparant the sactes of their seditious ministers seeme to bee, yet peraduenture the Spaniard himself will denie them to be his precepts, and directions. Did he then chastise those his ministers being returned into Spaine, as transgressers of his pleasures? Did hee detaine from them all rewards and preferments, as having ill deserved them? hath he blamed the auctours of such sacts, and excused himselfe to the Queene? I would to God it were so.

But goe to, let these witnesses passe. May hee be taken for a man of a good spirit, & of no poysoned minde against her Maiestie? Let then Guilielmus Cataneus, the Popes Secretarie that nowe is be produced: let his worke of the life of Pius Quintus sometime bishop of Rome be read. The saide Cataneus in that booke of his reporteth, that Philip the king of Spaine complained bitterly and with great griefe to the

As for the late treatie of peace with the Duke of Parma in Flanders, entredinto vpon the mediation, and request of the good prince the King of Denmarke, how smoothe & how slie a tuche was that? for her Maiestie, being wholy bent to that treatie, with a fincere minde and vnfayned desire, beholde as then at her doores, that huge & mightie Fleete of Spaine, beholde a fort of Armies brought out of Italie, and Germanie into Flanders, labouring and prouiding for nothing els but the desolation of the kingdome of England, and the destruction of the Queene: for the Conspiratours had as it were with their fingers, appointed enery one of vs to the slaughter: they had distributed our hou-

If the Spaniards seeme to object against these so grieuous, fo deadly, and so strange deuises, the succours which her Maiestie hath yeelded to the lowe Countreys; let them consider well, and they shall finde, that most of these practises have in time preceded the transporting of any ayde to them: let them denie (if they can) that they sollicited many English Subiects to rebell, beforeher Maiestie, so much as thought, of the relieuing of her auncient confederats, by her honest and iust meanes.

She appealeth to the King him telte, and to his Vice Royes in Flanders, how often, and what messengers she sent before that into Spaine, and Flanders, for breeding a concord and agreement betwixt the King, and the Nether-landers, not with hard, but with honourable and equall conditions: against which aduisoes and requestes, when the King began to be obdurate, and the auncient contracts of amitie betwixt the Nether-landers, and the Kings of England could not suffer them to be deprived of their lawes and libertie, and be exposed as a pray to Strangers, she at the last received them, being too much oppressed into her protection, onely of a desire to releeve the poore afflicted people, and not to offer the smallest iniurie to the King.

For if the had bene disposed to regard her owne comoditie, the might have taken another course, but she did not so: seeking rather as yet, earnestly, and diligently with any conditions, if not too vnreasonable, and such as may stand with her honor, and the profite of the state of Christianitie, howe a comodious and secure pacification may be made betwixt the King, and the States of the lowe

Countreys.

In vaine, and contrary to reason, hath she maintayned with great charge, that honorable Ambassage to the Duke of Parma the last yeere: in vaine was shee aduertised of the monstrous Nauie of Spaine, and the miraculous swarmes of sorces with Parma in Flanders, destinated & prepared for her ruine, and the spoile of her kingdome: she remained still without all intention or disposition to send any further forces into Flanders, and was after a fort fort negligent, both of defending herselfe, and of extending the limits of her governement beyonde the Seas, with purpose to liue in quietnesse without feare, and in peace without ambitious desire of rule: on the man is small term it tis least, how

And how soeuer she may be thought greedie of Her Maiesties other mens Dominions, she sent to Parma very no- into Flanderst ble and excellent Ambassadours, who being delay-intreate of a ed from day to day, from moneth to moneth, without any thing accomplished, she notwithstanding tooke it patiently, and suffered so farre these dangerous delayes, that the Spanish Souldiers panting with haste and greedinesse for the blood and butcherie of her Maiestie, and people most deare vnto her, were come vpon her coastes, and before her doores. In this fort was her hope deluded, and her opinion frustrated by him, contrary to the royall dignitie of both the Kingdomes of England and of Denmarke.

And if the victorious hand of God had not herein derided the cunning deuises and purposes of the Spaniards, if it had not scattered so great a terrour to all Christendome, and drenched their carkales in the Sea, what should the state of the said Hanse marchants haue bene, so busily and so contrary to al equitie and iustice, hastening to furnish him with corne & prouision for the warres? whither should the long and facred quiet of the Romane Empire haue gone to hide it selfe? where should all other Nations that professe the trueth of Christianitie, thinke that they might have shrowded them selves to be free from his tyrannie, and safe from his murderers and cruel executioners? If they faw not that their owne destruction was joyned with the ruine of the Queene of England, either it must be saide that they would denie Christ, or that they were blinded to their owne miserie by the vengeance of God, for their secret sinnes. For where the cause of hostilitie is all one, the like effect and issue is to be looked for at the hands of a cruell and raging enemie of the trueth: for in a maner, all the inhabitants of the Hanse Townes are very good fauourers of the reformed Religion, and mortall enemies to the Romish errors. And would any man then believe, that men so well instructed, coulde more respect their private gaine; I will not say their silthie lucre, then their owne securitie, the preservation of their Countrey, and the propagation of true Religion?

But what? will the inhabitants of the Hanse Townes pretend that they knewe not the Queene of Englands pleasure? The Citie of Hamborough by their letters written vnto the Queenes Maiestie, the 21. of September, in the yeere 1585. having befought her, that their ships might passe quietly vnto Spaine and Portugal, without stop or hindrance either in their passage or repassage, by her Maiessies Captaines at Sea, received not they answere

We doubt not, but you have heard what occasions of discorde are lately fallen out betweene vs and the king of Spaine, whereof wee cannot throughly coniecture what troubles are like to ensue. If peace arise, we meane to deny you nothing, being our ancient confederates but if it grow to a warre, we wish you aduisedly to consider, that it standeth not with the safetie of our kingdome, to suffer our enemies to be eayded with corne, and provisions for warre, thereby thereby to be armed against vs. Which things, according to your accustomed wisedomes you calling to minde, weekope 394 you will demaunde nothing at our handes, which may be hurtfull to our state: as for the transporting of other sortes of marchandise into those partes, whereby our enemies

- Secondly, whereas two yeeres after that, to wit, the last yeere the saide Burgomasters of Hambur- to the Queene rough sent Sebastian Berghen their Secretarie and Agent with letters vnto the Queene of England, desiring that under the colour and title of Newtralitie, they might freely passe into Spaine and Portingal, and repasse againe with alkind of marchandise whatsoeuer, was not the said Sebastian answered in this wife by the Lordes of her Maiesties Counsaile?

Whereas the King of Spaine, having sent out his Nauie to inuade this Realme, to roote out the Christian Reli- the petition of gion, & to worke the ruine & destruction of the Queenes fenger, Maiestie, hath declared more clearely then the light it self, what he would have the Queene of England to thinke of him, she deemeth it not reasonable upon any colour to graunt either to the Hambourgers, or to any other the Haunse Townes whosoever, to carry corne, gunnepowder, and other appurtenances for the warre to so obstinate and manifest enemie of the true Christian Religion. That such as presumptuously durst attempt the contrary, should suffer the punishment of their unbrideled licensiousnesses if they fels B.4.

: Alderman he Stilliard in idon, comnded to aduife Hanfe wnes.

Moreover it is not to be omitted, that the Lords of her Maiesties Counsell aforesaid, having called for Maurice Tymberman resident in London, and Alderman (as they call him) of the Stilliard, commanded him to give warning to all the Haunse Townes that her Maiestie willed, and according to her Soueraigne auctoritie in her Dominions, commanded that they shoulde forbeare from thenceforth, from the beginning of the moneth of Ianuarie last past from carying of corne, and generally of all provision of warre, cables, mastes, and like marchandise into Spaine and Portingall, whereby the enemie of her Kingdome might be the better furnished, vnder the paine of losse both of ships and goods, to be inflicted vpon fuch, as should violate this her princely commandement.

letters of the peckers, Hamagers, and attiskers.

That the Haunse Townes were not ignorant of this inhibition, appeareth by the letters of the Cities of Lubecke, and Hamborough, written afterwarde to the Queenes Maiestie, the 26. of March, and from Dantiske, the 13. of the saide moneth, before those ships set out from home, which are now taken. The same in like maner is apparant, by many bils of the hiring, and freyghting of their ships, wherein among others, this one thing is worth the noting, which was there found, that they couenanted in plaine words, with the shipmasters, that they should not passe into Spaine & Portingall through the

the English Chanel & viuall way, but on the backe | 995 side of the Kingdomes of Scotland, and Ireland, a newe and strange, and without doubt, a dangerous course: by which their intention and deede, they declared howe litle they cared for good meaning, and how carefullthey were to arme and furnish the common and knowen enemie of the Queene of England. But as alwayes for the most part it falleth out, deceite doeth neuer thrine with any man, and when men thinke most to deceive, they are deceiued, and suffer the penaltie of their guile: for falling into the handes of her Maiesties armie vpon the coast of Portugall, and even in the entrance of the hauen of Lisbone, they were brought backe into England, and by the lawe of Nations, are become prises to him which tooke them.

Here now they cry out, that the Commaunders. of our Fleete haue delt iniuriously with them, they exclaime that the leagues are broken, that their old priviledges in England are violated, which they chalenge to belong to their Cities, and ought to bekept and mainteined. As though that any man were so madde, so farre from the trueth of things, so carelesse of his owne safetie, so great an enemie to publike securitie, that with all his might and indeuour, would not preuent the mischiefe and destru-Aion hanging ouer the Commonwealth. Did ever any king or Prince witting and waring, fuffer such a kinde of trafike which should make his enemie ouer mightie, and though hee did not disfurnish himselse, yet shoulde leaue himselse more open vnto his furie, which otherwise were like to be vnarmed and vnable to wage warre against him?

he English and rench enemies: harles the fift confederate.

In the yeere 1545. at which time the warres grew hotte betwixt the kingdomes of England and Fraunce, when the subjects of Charles the Emperour the fift of that name of noble memorie, would needes haue had free libertie of passage with all commodities into Fraunce, vnder pretext of their Newtralitie, What was the Emperours answere being a Prince of great equitie? When the Kings of Denmarke, and of Swethlande were at difference one with another, was it permitted to these Hansemen to conuay freely any thing into one of their kingdomes, which was not in deede ceased vpon & confiscated, if it fel into the laps of the other, not having first obtained speciall libertie for the same? Was this stately, & so much priviledged name of Newtralitie at that time, of fuch force, that without vsing of any mediatour, it could recouer againe their goods out of the hands of the Danes & Swethens, & coutenance the same in safetie, & securitie? Let them acknowledge that, whereof they are not ignorant, that although the Emperour Ferdinande and other Princes of the Empire dealt in their behalfe by way of intreatie and 1110 mediation,

And further in the time of hostilitie between the Empire, wherewith as then the king of Poland ioyned against the great Duke of Atuscouie, went The Emperour these matters otherwise then? Could either the En- and the Kingo Poland enemie glish marchants, or anie other frequent the Narue in Liuonia, or any other partes of the Dukes domini- and Hansemen ons freely, and without daunger? Did the Hanse men which then were for their king and Emperor, deliuer and restore againe the shippes which they had intercepted and taken, from those which made fuch attempts? Many mens goods furprised by the Hansemen and others, as then intertained against the Moscouite, and by them still detained, without anie precedent prohibitio of passing to the said Moscouite, are hereof very good witnesses.

It is also a thing well knowen, that the noble Prince of Orange, and the States, exercised the like iustice, as well against the Hanse men, as others in times past.

And verely the foresaid Princes in these arrestes did that which was according to the tenour, and prescription of the lawes of the equitie of nations. For that same priviledge of Newtralitie, is in such fort to bee vsed and injoyed, that in helping one of our confederates, we hurt not another: so that hee which helpeth one, & thereby damnifieth another, falleth from his priviledge and contract: not because he helpeth one of his confederates, but because he doeth prejudice another, and by that fact of his, makes himselse an enemie, as offering the first iniurie, iniurie, and therefore in so doing, he is to bee taken and reputed for an Adherent, and Assistant to the enemie, and a very enemy himselfe.

This then beeing the state of these thinges, what lawe, what reason, or example may be objected to the contrary, but that it is lawfull for the Queene of Englad, whose scepter, diademe, kingdome, liuing, and life, are greedily thirsted after by the Spaniard, so potent and so malicious an enemie, to doe that against his fautors and fauourers so often premonished, which was lawful for the Emperour, for the Empire, for the king of Swethen, for the king of Denmarke, for the Prince of Orange, for the States of Netherland, yeafor the Hanse men themselues to doe in the like cause, but not in the like danger, and extremitic as this is.

Nay, if wee thought it requisite to alleadge any thing out of the priviledges themselves, whereof they have so often, and so much complained, as being many yeeres withheld from them by iniustice, wee might offer the charter of Edward the sirst king of England, to be perused, granted in the third yere of his raigne: in which charter wee reade these expresse wordes.

An exception in the priviledge:

That all the aforefaide Marchants may at any time carrie, or cause to bee carried into or out of the kingdome of England, their marchandizes, which they shall bring with them, or buy here or otherwise come by, excepting to the countreyes of the manifest and notorious enemies of this kingdome.

So that either they must denie, that the king of Spaine having practised such cruell and horrible things (I would to God we might not say stil practi-ing the ame) is an enemie to the Queene of England, or els by the wordes of the aforesaide charter, (307) they must confesse that they are included within those boundes and limites, which they may not passe, if they desire to bee called and accompted friendes. A distribution of the deponing rounds

We may adde to all this, that it is a thing able to beshewed and proued in the Courts of Records of the kings of England, that heretofore the warres arising, and continuing betwixt the kinges of England and of Fraunce, the goods of these Hanse men were so subject here in England to arrestes, as now they are, untill they grew more warie, and had put in sufficient Sureties, that they woulde not from that time transport any part of their goods into the prouinces and dominions of the French king

By these reasons we take it plainely, and fully demonstrated, that her Maiesties Captaines by Sea, in the present arrest of the Hanse mens goods, haue committed no iniustice against their preteded priuiledges but rather that they have veterly lost them for this pranke of theirs, in causing victualles and martiall furnitures to bee convayed to the countries of her manifest and notorious enemies, directly contrary to the wordes specified in the priviledges. Although her Maiestie is not purposed, notwithstanding all present extremities, and this most vileand most barbarous part of the Hanse marchants, to proceede in dealing with them, according to that severitie of law which justly she might execute, but is nowe thus farre onely resolued, to confiscate all the corne and provisions of warre; and as for the shippes themselnes, and other sortes of them for the present.

of marchandile in them, thee is content to dilmisse

But nowe touching the matter of their priviledges, for which they keepe such a stirre, in complayning to the Emperour, the states of the Empire, and al other princes els, which neuerthelesse are cleerely found to have beene broken, and forfeited in the time of Edward the fixt, that most noble and famous prince. The Queene of Englande can sufficiently proue, that these Hanse men haue deserued no benefite or fauour at her hands, euen by the lawes of the Empire it selfe, if her Maiestie thought the argument necessary to stande vpon. It is a very apparant thing, that her Maiestie neglecting and not regarding the vniust pretenses and forged suggestions, wherewith these Hanse men haue charged her among strangers, hath yeelded to them no lesse abenesit offree negotiation, then to her owne sublects, without any other restraint but this, that in liewe and memorie of so singular a fauour, they also on then to the fing- their parts should graunt the like freedome in their portes, and cities to her subjects, and marchantes: and yet like vikinde people, and without respect to this fauour, they returne to their olde byas, & cease not to attempt thinges dangerous to her Maiestie, and by the opinions of all princes in no case to bee suffered. but, harmen of lagailmeddiw he fauour and iberalitie of the Queene of England, no leste to the Haunse men, lish themselues.

> These Hanse men were at the like controuersie sometimes with the kings of Denmarke & Swethen, by reason of certaine like privileges in the kingdomes of Norway and Swethland, and the matter grew so hot that it brake out to an open warre; but with what fruite or gaine to the state of the Haunse fuch conditions of priviledges, not as they challenged but as the foresaid kings thought inst, & equal.

By which president they might learne if they were wise, not to accept only, but most gladly & thankefully to accept the conditions offered by her Maiestie, as proceeding from such a kind of liberalitie, that may make them in this case superiouts to all other Strangers, equal and alike with her owne Subjects. But if they continue in this their stubbernesse and ingratitude, let them take heede least they plucke upon themselves that most instrument of their most perverse behaviours, whereof they haue felt the smart before this, both in Swethlande, Worway and Liuonia also.

Seeing then these Hanse men haue received from her Maiestie many great benefits, but no ill deserts at any time, shee desireth the Emperours Maiestie, and the rest of the Princes and States of the Empire, to give no credite to the rumours spread abroad by them, or by the friendes of the Romish Church, or by such as are corrupted with Spanish pensions, mensuborned of purpose to scatter these false surmises, to the ende that we being drawen to a mutual dislike and hatted, they in the meane time may the sooner and the more easily bring vs, and the Religion which we professe (if it were possible) vndersoote.

And further her Maiestie intreateth, that this heavie warre entred into with the Spaniard, for the mainteinance whereof no small but huge summes are of necessitie required, and wherein the quarrell is not in her owne behalfe onely, but for the safetie demauded, whether if an inuation of the kingdome should be made by the Bishop of Rome or the Spanish King, they would (as good Subjects ought to do) stand for the Queene or no, they answere stoutly and proudly, that they are bound when so ener it should seeme good to the said Bishop of Rome, to make any such innation of the Kingdome, and Dominions of her Maiestie, to assist and surther the said inuasion, by althe wayes and meanes they can.

I aske nowe of you, what Prince soeuer you be, hauing the authoritie of a Prince, what you would doe with such monsters as these are, given over after this fort to such divelishnes? would you suffer the cloke of popish religion and obedience, to exempt such traytors from the seueritie of Iustice? woulde you suffer them to live, that woulde you should not live? furely no Prince or Monarche ought or may tollerate such monstrous creatures, except he purposeth voluntarily to neglect good lawes, his people, kingdome, and life; and sinne grieuously against God himselfe. And these are the monsters that are in England committed to execution; howsoeuer the companions of their treafons, by their infamous libels spread amongst the people crie out, and fay, they suffer for the cause of Religion onely, and for their consciences.

Many of her subiects, and they no obscure men, but some of the Nobilitie, and some others of the degree of knights are witnesses, that howsocuer they stand catholikely affected, yet as long as they conteine themselves within the compasse of their duetie, & obedience to her Maiestie and the State, are neither committed to prilon, nor in any ill fort vsed, only for breaking the lawes of frequenting the (400).
Churches, are peraduenture rated at some pecuniarie fine.

The ende and purpose why wee speake and publish these things, is to let all good Princes and Magistrates, and others desirous to know the trueth of things, understandehowe and by what meanes, as openly, privily, by force of armes, and practiles of treacherie, the state of her Maiestie and of her kingdome is assaulted by the bishop of Rome, and the Spanish King: and therefore howe conveniently and necessarily her Maiestie is drawen to resist this force and to auoyde these frauds, and with what iniurious allegations the execution of lawes and iustice, is as it were torne and rent in pieces, not only by malitious imprinted Libels, but also by painted tables and pictures, signifying I knowe not what monstrous things, relemblances of some barbarous crueltie, as they falselcalumniate and exclaime, to be vsed against the foresaid Iesuites, and Seminarie Priests, that is to say, against men guiltie of high and horrible treason.

But as for her Maiestie, she desireth to stand as a person voide of all trueth and credite with good Princes, if she euer punished any of these men with any strange or newe kinde of torment, then is appointed by the prescript of the ancient lawes of this Realme prouided against such persons, as shall be found and conuicted for Rebels and Traytors.
